first railroad movement with which I was ever connected. I had for years been paying especial attention to railroad law, and was called on fer and opinion concerning some bonds of the Petersburg and Weldon road, a little branch en erprise in which some Richmond men had invested. I soon saw that the safest course of procedure was to buy up cermin bonds, and I thought I could raise the money to do so. It only required about $50,000, and I went to New Yord to see about it. The bonds were offered for $15 on the getting meney to buy them, so great was the fear and distrust that northern capital had of southern investment than I found a few weeks ago in raising millions of dollars in New York with which to organize the extension building the Georgia Pacific, It is very much easier now to raise a miltion dollars in New York for southern i vestment than it was three years ago to raise $50,900. Instead of the disttens and fear that formerly existed, there is actual engerness to get southbased on the belief that there is a great margin for development in the South, and on the success that has at-
